The Adams Neurosciences Center will redefine neurological care in Connecticut.

February 6, 2025 – Turner Construction Company celebrated the topping out of McGivney Tower, marking the completion of vertical construction of the Yale New Haven Health St. Raphael Campus' Adams Neurosciences Center. The $838 million project is designed to elevate the standard of neurological care in Connecticut.

The milestone was commemorated with a ceremony to recognize the dedication and achievements of the project team and partners.

The Adams Neurosciences Center will introduce 204 additional beds and provide innovative care to patients. Encompassing two advanced patient care towers, the center will specialize in the treatment of neurological conditions such as epilepsy, Parkinson's disease, multiple sclerosis, stroke, and spinal disorders. In addition to its comprehensive clinical services, the facility will house cutting-edge neuroimaging, surgical, and rehabilitation services.

"This milestone reflects the exceptional teamwork and innovation that drives our mission at Turner," said Chad McCullough, Vice President and General Manager, Turner Construction Company. "The Adams Neurosciences Center will transform neurological care in the region, improving lives through advanced treatments and compassionate care. We extend our deepest gratitude to Yale New Haven Hospital, our trade partners, and the local community for their invaluable contributions to this project."

Slated for completion in 2026, the center is poised to become a beacon of hope and innovation for patients and families, underscoring Turner Construction's commitment to building a better future.
